2022: International Year of Artisanal Fisheries and Aquaculture

This year, the United Nations is drawing attention to the important work of millions of small-scale fishers, fish farmers and fish workers who provide food to billions of people around the world. The objective is to amplify the voices of these workers, ensuring they participate in policy-making discussions and that actions are taken to support them.

Curtin University Malaysia is taking actions to support the emerging aquaculture industry in Sarawak, Malaysia. The campus recently launched a new Master of Science (Sustainable Aquaculture) and postgraduate research in sustainable aquaculture has commenced. This will be further strengthened with the establishment of a local aquaculture research facility at the campus that will help to increase food security in the region and place Sarawak at the forefront of aquaculture technology, equipment and research.
